When near the bridge, they suddenly left the road and attempted to awim the Licking River. But Oates had gone but a few feet from the bank, when he sank and was drowned. His body was subsequently recovered and buried.

Doyle and Walker succeeded in reaching the opposite side, where the former made his escape, but the latter was caught and retaken to the jail. Hurtt was caught before reaching the river, and was yesterday afternoon

The trial of Walker was also set for the same afternoon, water was also set for the same atternoon, but when the officer went to bring him up he was found in his cell weltering in blood from two deep gashes, which he had inflicted upon his throat with a rezor. Medical aid was immediately procured and the wounds sewed up, but it is still doubtful whether he will survive. It is reported that Walker has preriously served a term in the Kentucky Pententiary.

Why the Ohio Troops in Washington Havo Not Been Paid. The following is the official report of Mr. Platt to Governor Denuison, in reference to the payment of the Ohio troops now in the payment of the Chio troops now in Washington:

Sie: In compliance with your instructions of the 6th inst., I left this pince in the afternoon of that day, for Washington City, and arrived there on the morning of the 8th.

I first called on the Sacretary of the Treasury, explained to him the object of my visit, showed him my letter of instructions, and left with him the $25,000 sent to pay for one month's service of the First and Second Regiments of Ohlo Volunteers, which he received with apparent settisfaction.

I then went to the encampment of the Chio troops on the northern boundary of the city, saw and conversed with officers and privates in regard to rumors of their destitute condireope on the northern boundary of the city, saw and conversed with officers and privates in regard to rumors of their destinate condition which were in circulation; told them of your desire that every ground of complaint should be removed, and that with this view I had been sent with money to pay them for one month's service, and to examine into the condition of their clothing and report what might be needed to make them comfortable.

Upon inquiry I secertained that the clothing and shoes furnished them in Pennsylvania were not all of one quality, part being inferior and part good, but was assured by both officers and men that it was not so bad as had been represented. I found that the First Regiment had just received a new cutift from the United States, and was comfortably clothed. The Second Regiment was still wearing the Pennsylvania uniform. It was much worn and soiled, and not suitable for a day's dress, but I learned that steps had already been taken for furnishing this regiment also with United States uniforms, which they received within a few days after, and are now clothed in the same manner as the First Regiment.

To provide for wants which it was expected would be found pressing and require immediate attention, five hundred pairs of pantaloons were forwarded to Washington, to be furnished to the troops on my arrival. As these were not needed, directions were given for their immediate return to Columbus, together with one thousand and forty-eight pairs of drawers and one hundred and forty-eight pairs of drawers and one hundred and forty-eight pairs of drawers and one hundred and forty-eight Bannel shirts, furnished by the State, which were reported by Colonel McCook to be on hand and not wanted by the men.

I was informed by Colonel McCook that blankets for thirty privates, and blouses, pents, and blankets for eleven musicians of the First Regiment were needed, and recommended that they be furnished immediately.

pents, and blankets for eleven musicians of the First Regiment were needed, and recommended that they be furnished immediately. The officers of the First Regiment ask the State to relieve them of a liability incurred for a band of musicians, amounting to $198 per month, being $18 each for eleven musicians. The United States authorities will not recognize this expenditure, and if not paid by the State it will fall on the officers. Under the circumstances, this expense appears to me proper, and that it should be borne by the State. I therefore respectfully recommend that it be paid.

On my arrival in Washington, as before stated, I left with the Secretary of the Treasury $25,000, to be applied to the payment of one month's wages of the Ohio troops, and made this fact known to them. A few days after, finding the men were not paid, I called

A fair inhibitor demand, and officers had omitted to furnish—that on the receipt of them by the Paymaster-General the money would be immediately paid. This I soon made known to the men. There seems to be some difficulty in getting the muster-rolls made out correctly, owing, apparently, to the want of a clear understanding on the part of officers of the wishes of the pay department. Two or more sets were made which were unsatisfactory. The day before leaving for home, when at The day before leaving for home, when at the camp, I saw seven or eight men busity engaged making out a third or fourth set, and was assured they would be "all right this time," and completed in time to draw the money the following morning, all of which I supposed would be accomplished. On calling at the Treasury Department some days after leaving the $25,000, I was informed that provisions had been made for paying our troops without using this money, and that, to avoid confusion in the accounts of the Department, it would be returned to

Having been assured by the Secretary of the Treasury that this return would cause no delay in paying our soldiers, I received back the same drafus farnished me by the State Auditor, and on my return to Columbus paid
